

The one and only God - The biggest lie in human history

Robert Kaufmann

In this text, I deal with the supposedly only God of the Abrahamic religions. However, there were and are other monotheistic religions with a different God in terms of content.

First of all, it should be noted that belief in gods only occurs in the human specy and not in other animal's thinking. Gods originate from the human imagination and are linked to the problematic, presumptuous judgment of humans that there should be something higher than really existing beings and things. However, human values only have legitimacy with regard to human actions, statements and thoughts.

Humans have invented millions of gods, the majority of which have been disproved in their existence to the extent that no one believes in them anymore. In view of a history of millions of gods, the idea of a single god is a particularly presumptuous and sick notion. For it would entail a devaluation of everything else, including other gods believed in by humans and systems of thought that exist without gods. The idea of only one god also necessarily leads to violence and intolerance. This can be seen in the violent spread of Christianity and Islam, as well as in the persecution of dissenters and even terror up to the present day.

First of all, it should be noted that in the source texts of the Abrahamic religions, not one god but three supposed deities were created. This can be explained as follows: The addressees of the Jewish God YHWH are exclusively Jews. This "God" is sometimes even hostile to other peoples. Wars are to be waged against them. The Christian God, on the other hand, has a strong connection with Jesus, whereas the Islamic God is strongly influenced by Mohammed. The three main Abrahamic faiths of Judaism, Christianity and Islam are strongly separated from each other. Different beliefs, rites and rules apply. The Qur'an even openly rejects Jews and Christians on several occasions, even including the use of violence. It must therefore necessarily be a different God to that of the Christians and Jews. Consequently, the Abrahamic source texts themselves refute the idea of a single God. There are three gods there. They should be given an individual name and not falsely referred to as just "God" in a particularly presumptuous manner.

The authors of the Tanakh, which essentially corresponds to the Old Testament, were obviously liars and they attributed their thoughts and evaluations and their misguided ideas about the world to a god. This can be seen in the primitive preference of the supposed God for a certain people and a territory to be ruled by him. This is also evident from the meticulous, largely stupid regulations (there are 613 mitzvot for Jews!). It is simply sickening and embarrassing, for example, that a God who is supposed to have created the entire universe should enter into a covenant with male Jewish babies on their eighth day by circumcising their penis. Obviously, only the priesthood is supposed to intervene in people's lives at a very early stage and who not even respect the physical integrity of minors.

The stories of Jesus in the New Testament also contain lies in essential points: This applies to the supposed resurrection of Jesus. As this did not take place, Jesus' ascension to heaven was also fictitious. Otherwise Jesus would still be here!

Furthermore: The fact that his death on the cross brought anything to mankind as a whole is a lie. No death of any human being brings about any miraculous things. In general, people's idea that there is anything after death is misguided and distorted. Humans, like other animals, are temporally limited physical beings and everything mental-spiritual necessarily depends on the brain.

Mohammed also never had any contact with a higher being, although he may have believed this to be the case, at least in exceptional states of mental illness. The content of the entire Qur'an is not at all appealing. Submission to the supposed God is demanded, in fact only obedience to the priesthood, which imposes all kinds of idiotic rules on people and virtually incapacitates them. The Islamic system is very intolerant and discriminatory towards women. The criminal law of Sharia, which is interpreted differently, contains inappropriately brutal corporal punishments up to barbaric stoning for adultery, which in my opinion is not worthy of punishment.

It is simply idiotic that a god should reward belief in him in the afterlife and punish non-belief. For a god, it is necessarily irrelevant whether ape-like beings who live for a few decades believe in his existence or not. The fact of believing in a god only plays a role for the priesthood. There is nothing positive about considering the three Abrahamic misconstructions as God, but something very negative.

In view of the inferiority of the content of the Abrahamic source texts and the fact that books written by humans are a priori not suitable instruments for the transmission of a divine will, because the divine will could only spread particularly slowly over centuries in this way, the question arises as to what "God" is. It is definitely not a powerful subject, but rather an object without content to which people attribute any content they wish. In the case of book religions, the first attribution of content is made by human writers. The creation of the three inferior Abrahamic misconstructions is comparable to that of the likeable comic characters Asterix or Donald Duck. All these characters were created by books written by humans and only exist in our imagination.

According to the written "revelation", it is again only people who further develop the supposed divine will and attribute content to "God", namely above all the religious dignitaries who only pretend to proclaim the divine will. Since these people do not agree on the divine will, "God" also has very different opinions on essential issues! This also explains the numerous different beliefs in the Abrahamic religions and the disputes between the individual religious groups, including open violence.

Since the respective God is obviously only an object of attribution by us humans, the idea of a God as a real existence apart from the world of human thought should be overcome as quickly as possible by every human being as a thesis that is hereby refuted. It is high time that we humans evolve and stop referring to misconstructions of our imagination as "God" and, above all, stop paying attention to people who refer to "God". Because anyone who invokes (any) God necessarily has no argument on their side.
